“ How do you share just one memory of your dad? My dad was a great man. He lived a life anyone would be proud of and more of us should aspire to. He worked hard. He loved deeply. He was honest, loyal, and compassionate. Dad and I didn't always agree...in fact, we probably disagreed more than we agreed...but very recently I had an experience that showed me just how much I truly listened all these years and how wise my dad truly was. It took most of my life to understand him and even more of it to realize that he understood me, but in the end, we both knew. Dad didn't love out loud very often, but he showed his love every day in the things he did...and the things he didn't do. He taught me how to take care of myself-- maybe a little too well because I've never been very good at letting people help me. He taught me to think for myself---and that he may have regretted at times where politics were concerned (I don't think we ever agreed on that!). My dad never tried to live my life for me, he just lived his and set a remarkable example. Dad always said that he was the last in the line of Hamptons and maybe that's true in terms of the name, but he is such a big part of me...and mom...and I see him in my sons all the time. Dad may have been the end of the Hampton name, but he left his mark on all of us and that doesn't end. I love you Dad...and I miss you more than I can express.
